Day 1 - Ideation

Brainwriting

What excites me about the movies I watch?

- Music
- Extreme colors combined with colors (e.g. halsey - die for me)

- Interesting lighting
- Extraordinary and detailed makeup, outfits and styling (e.g. elité on Netflix)

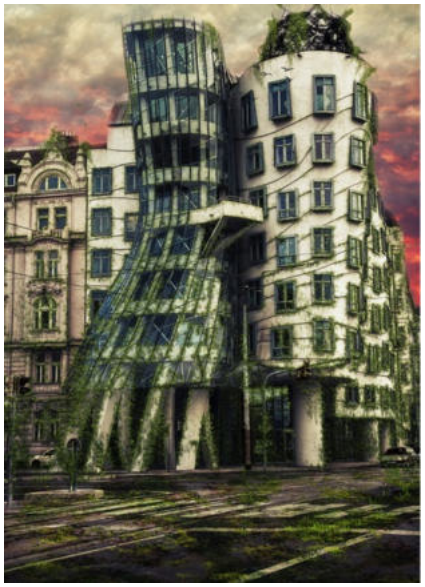

- Provocative, feminist (not so on the nose) (e.g. halsey - nightmare, Barbie movie)
- Society critique also by showing the consequences

Input

Using random picture generator

→ woman on a motorcycle

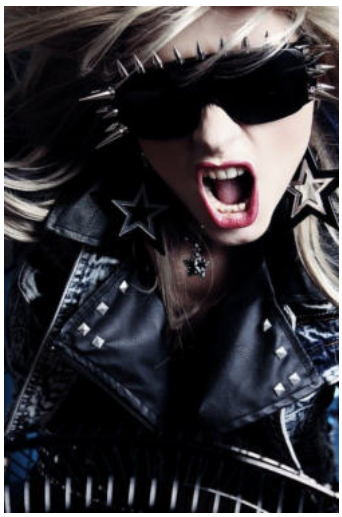

→ dystopian film that shows some form of human failure

→ change face/ something with beauty standards

→ show things that are normal now as old and decaying vs new technology

 → style inspo

Bringing it together

Using Gemini(Chatbot)

Prompt 1:
I want to create a shortfilm. Please give me 5 ideas for a shortfilm based on the following notes from my ideation: [notes above minus the pictures]

Output 1:
Here are 5 short film concepts blending your specific aesthetic preferences (Halsey-esque visuals, Elite styling, high-saturation lighting) with your thematic inputs (dystopia, motorcycles, beauty standards).

---

1. The Glitch Vanity

The Concept: A critique on digital filters and the erasing of "imperfections."

- The World: A near-future where physical makeup is obsolete. Everyone wears a permanent, projected AR (Augmented Reality) "face" that corrects features in real-time. The rich have glowing, shifting, high-fashion faces; the poor have static, glitchy ones.
- Visual Aesthetic:
    - Lighting/Color: Deep, pulsating purples and neon greens. The AR faces are hyper-saturated, while the "real" environment is crumbling concrete and rusted metal.
    - Styling: The protagonist wears an oversized, decaying vintage leather jacket (motorcycle gear) over a pristine, futuristic latex bodysuit.
- The Plot: A young woman rides her motorcycle through the "Dead Zone" (an area with no signal). As the signal drops, her AR face flickers and vanishes, revealing her real skin—pores, scars, texture. She panics, but then catches her reflection in the bike's chrome mirror. She realizes the "decaying" reality is more beautiful than the lie. She rides back into the city and sets off an EMP device, forcing everyone to reveal their true faces.

2. Chrome Skinned

The Concept: Objectification of women turned literal.

- The World: In a society where status is determined by how much of your biological body you have replaced with "aesthetic tech." The ultimate trend is "The Doll" look—smooth, plasticized skin with no expressions.

- Visual Aesthetic:
    - Lighting: Harsh strobe lights, club lighting, laser reds and blues (reminiscent of Halsey's Die for Me).
    - Styling: Elite meets Mad Max. High-school uniform silhouettes but made of chainmail and transparent plastic. Heavy, graphic eyeliner.
- The Plot: The protagonist is a mechanic who fixes the motorcycles of the elite. She is pressured to "upgrade" her face to keep her job. Instead, she modifies her motorcycle helmet to project "monstrous" expressions (rage, screaming) onto her visor. She rides through a high-society gala, revving her engine to drown out their polite classical music with aggressive bass, forcing them to look at the anger they try to surgically remove.

3. The Archive of Melancholy

The Concept: Toxic positivity and the commercialization of emotion.

- The World: Negative emotions are illegal. Everyone must smile; society is bright, pastel, and eerily perfect (like the Barbie movie but sinister).
- Visual Aesthetic:
    - Lighting: Overly bright, diffuse white light that slowly shifts to deep, muddy shadows as the protagonist breaks the rules.
    - Styling: Exaggerated 1950s silhouettes but with modern textures (vinyl, neon wigs).
- The Plot: The protagonist finds an old, decaying iPod (old tech) in a ruin. She puts on headphones and hears a screaming heavy metal or grunge track. The music triggers a physical transformation—her perfect makeup begins to run and melt, creating a "joker-esque" smear. She gets on her bike, not to escape, but to drive circles around the city square, her weeping/screaming face serving as live performance art that horrifies and mesmerizes the frozen, smiling crowd.

4. Recycled Gods

The Concept: Fast fashion and the disposal of the "old."

- The World: A caste system based on color. The lower class lives in black and white (literally, no color exists there). The upper class hoards all color pigment.
- Visual Aesthetic:
    - Lighting: High contrast. The protagonist is in greyscale, but the world she enters is an assault of RGB LED lights.
    - Styling: She wears a suit made of trash (old CDs, wires) that glitters like diamonds under the lights.
- The Plot: The protagonist is a courier who rides a vintage combustion-engine motorcycle (loud, dirty, "old tech") to smuggle pigment. She is caught and brought before the "Beauty Council." They try to paint her, to assimilate her. Instead, she unleashes a canister of black oil/grease, staining their perfect neon outfits. The visual serves as a feminist critique: rejecting the colorful "packaging" women are forced into in favor of the raw, messy machinery beneath.

5. Idle

The Concept: The pressure to always be "on" and performing.

- The World: Humans are powered by "Attention." If people stop looking at you, your lights go out, and you freeze (like a statue).
- Visual Aesthetic:
    - Lighting: Bioluminescent clothing. When the character is alone, the screen is almost pitch black. When she enters a club, the screen explodes with color.
    - Styling: Avant-garde structural fashion (think Iris van Herpen).
- The Plot: A famous influencer is tired. She rides her motorcycle to the edge of the world where there is no one to look at her. As she rides, her glowing outfit dims, and her makeup fades. The audience expects her to die/freeze. Instead, in the total darkness, she lights a single, real match (analog light). It's small, warm, and orange—contrasting the cold neon of the city. She takes a breath, finally unobserved, and smiles genuinely for the first time.

Summary of Stylistic Elements across all ideas:

- Music: The engine of the motorcycle should be mixed as a musical instrument—rhythmic revving that transitions into the film's score (heavy bass/electronic).
- Camera Work: Use a "SnorriCam" (camera rigged to the actor's body) for the motorcycle scenes to create a dizzying, intense feeling of speed and disorientation.

Would you like me to take one of these ideas and expand it into a scene-by-scene outline?

Result 1:

Recycled gods → I love references to ancient greek/roman myths

Prompt 2:

What are interesting feminist topics I could discuss in my short film?

Output 2:

To keep the film from feeling "too on the nose" or preachy, the best feminist themes in film often function as metaphors. You want to show the consequence of a societal pressure through a sci-fi or dystopian lens.

Given your interest in Halsey/Elite aesthetics (hyper-stylized, dark pop) and technology/body horror, here are 5 feminist topics framed for your specific short film concept:

1. The "Algorithmic Gaze" (The New Male Gaze)

Instead of a man looking at a woman, it is the algorithm deciding her value.

- The Critique: How AI and social media filters homogenize women's faces into one specific "correct" look. It explores the loss of ethnic features, unique scars, or "imperfections" in favor of a mathematically generated standard of beauty.
- Visual Metaphor: The protagonist is trying to start her motorcycle, but the bike's biometrics won't turn on because it doesn't recognize her face without her digital "filter." She is trapped by her own beauty settings.
- Styling: Start with hyper-perfect Elite style makeup. As she gets frustrated, she physically claws the digital layer off, revealing raw skin underneath.

2. Female Rage as "Hysteria" vs. Power

Society often labels angry women as "crazy" or "hysterical," whereas angry men are seen as "powerful."

- The Critique: The suppression of female anger. Women are conditioned to smile and de-escalate. What happens when that pressure cooker explodes?
- Visual Metaphor: The motorcycle engine. The revving of the engine is the scream she isn't allowed to release.
- Styling/Color: Use the "Halsey - Nightmare" aesthetic. When she is polite, the world is desaturated and blue. When she taps into her rage (revs the bike), the world bleeds into violent, high-saturation reds and strobe lights. The "monster" inside her is actually her source of fuel.

3. Aesthetic Labor as Body Horror

"Aesthetic Labor" is the time and money women are expected to spend to look "professional" or "presentable," which men generally do not have to do.

- The Critique: In your dystopian world, this could be literalized. Beauty isn't just makeup; it's painful machinery. High heels that are fused to the feet, or corsets that are actual rib-replacements.
- Visual Metaphor: A scene of her "getting ready" (usually a fun montage in movies) but shot like a horror surgery scene. The sound design is crunching bone and stretching skin, but the result is a beautiful, glossy fashion look.

- Styling: Detailed, restrictive outfits. Think plastic corsets, neck rings, or wires woven into hair.

4. The "Disposable Muse"

This touches on your note about "Old/Decaying vs. New Technology."

- The Critique: Pop culture and society love teenage girls (the "Muse") but discard women as they age. Women are treated like iPhone models—valued only when brand new, then replaced by the "next gen."
- Visual Metaphor: The protagonist is riding through a scrapyard. But instead of cars, the scrap pile is full of mannequins or "older model" android women who were thrown away simply for being 30+ or showing wear and tear.
- Styling: The protagonist wears "Vintage" clothes (maybe 90s/00s grunge) to show she has history and texture, contrasting against a villain who is terrifyingly smooth, plastic, and "new."

5. Weaponized Femininity (The "Honey Trap" Subverted)

Using the tools of oppression (makeup, heels, fashion) as the weapons of liberation.

- The Critique: Feminism doesn't have to mean rejecting pink or dresses. It can mean using those things to dismantle the system. It critiques the idea that "girly" = "weak."
- Visual Metaphor: The motorcycle itself is painted in typically "feminine" colors (chromatic pink or glitter), but it is the fastest, deadliest machine on the road. She uses her jewelry or hairpins as tools to fix the engine.
- Styling: Extremely exaggerated, high-femme fashion (long acrylic nails, massive lashes) that looks impractical, but she uses these specific items to hack the system or fight back.

Which angle resonates most?

- Option A: The psychological angle (The Algorithm/Identity)
- Option B: The visceral/emotional angle (Rage/Body Horror)
- Option C: The societal angle (Aging/Disposability)

Would you like me to help you brainstorm a "Visual Hook" (the opening shot) for one of these topics?

Result 2:

Perception of showing emotions women vs. men

Prompt 3:

What ancient Greek myths exist that fit the story of women always being perceived as overly emotional and men as powerful?

Output 3:

Here are 5 Ancient Greek myths that perfectly fit the theme of women being pathologized as "too emotional" or "crazy" while men remain powerful. I have adapted each into a "Short Film Twist" based on your specific aesthetic (motorcycles, dystopia, Halsey/Elite vibes).

1. The Myth of Cassandra (The "Hysterical" Truth Teller)

The Myth: Cassandra was given the gift of prophecy by Apollo, but when she refused to sleep with him, he cursed her so that no one would ever believe her.She screamed that Troy would fall, that there were soldiers in the horse, but she was dismissed as a raving "madwoman."

- The Double Standard: When men predict doom, they are "strategists." When Cassandra does it, she is "hysterical."
- Short Film Twist:
    - The World: A high-tech city where the "Algorithm" predicts everything (crime, stock market).

    - The Character: A data analyst who finds a glitch/error in the code that proves the city is about to collapse.
    - The Plot: She tries to warn the "Council" (all men in suits). They smile patronizingly, call her "burnt out," and prescribe her sedatives to "calm her nerves."
    - The Climax: She gets on her motorcycle, screaming the truth as she rides, but her helmet mutes her voice. The city collapses in the background exactly as she predicted, while she rides away in silence.

2. Medusa (The Victim Turned Monster)

The Myth: Medusa was a beautiful priestess who was raped by Poseidon (a powerful male god) in Athena's temple. Instead of punishing the rapist, Athena punished the victim for "defiling" her temple, turning her into a snake-headed monster who turns men to stone.

- The Double Standard: Male gods (Zeus, Poseidon) assault women constantly and are worshipped as "virile." Women who are victims are labelled "damaged goods" or "monsters."
- Short Film Twist:
    - The World: An underground club scene where women are commodities.
    - The Character: A woman who was assaulted by a powerful gang leader.
    - The Visuals: Instead of snakes, she shaves her head and installs fiber-optic cables that glow neon green/venomous yellow (Halsey Nightmare aesthetic).
    - The Climax: She enters the club. She doesn't fight; she just removes her sunglasses. Her cybernetic eyes record/broadcast the men's crimes instantly to the cloud. They "freeze" (turn to stone) not literally, but out of fear of being exposed.

3. The Maenads (The "Crazy" Party Girls)

The Myth: The Maenads were female followers of Dionysus (god of wine/ecstasy).They would go into the mountains, dance, drink, and tear animals apart with their bare hands in a state of mania.

- The Double Standard: When men drink and rage, it's "boys being boys" or "war." When women let loose, it is "madness" and dangerous chaos that must be controlled.
- Short Film Twist:
    - The World: A sterile, grey dystopia where emotions are suppressed by mandatory "calmness" chips.
    - The Characters: A girl gang on motorcycles (The Maenads). They take a neon-colored drug that allows them to feel rage and joy.
    - The Visuals: Intense strobe lighting. Their makeup smears as they sweat and scream.
    - The Plot: They aren't hurting anyone, just dancing aggressively and revving their engines. The police (The Authority) arrive in riot gear, treating their joy as a riot/terrorist threat. The film ends with the girls smiling bloodily as they are arrested, happier than the "sane" people watching.

4. Clytemnestra (The Woman Who Ruled Like a Man)

The Myth: While her husband Agamemnon was at war (and sacrificing their daughter Iphigenia for "good luck"), Clytemnestra ruled the kingdom efficiently. When he returned, she killed him for murdering their daughter. She is vilified in history as a treacherous monster, while Agamemnon is a hero despite killing his own child.

- The Double Standard: A man killing for "duty" (war) is noble. A woman killing for "justice" (revenge) is a villain.
- Short Film Twist:
    - The World: A corporate dystopia. The CEO (Agamemnon) sacrifices the "safety division" (the daughter) to boost stock prices.
    - The Character: The COO (Clytemnestra), his wife, who runs the company while he is away on a PR tour.

    - The Plot: He returns, expecting her to step down. Instead, she greets him in the boardroom. She is wearing a sharp, red power suit (Elite style).
    - The Climax: She doesn't use a weapon. She hands him a single folder—evidence of his fraud—and whispers, "I did what was necessary." She watches him be dragged away by security, taking his seat at the head of the table.

5. Hera and Io (The "Crazy Jealous Ex")

The Myth: Zeus cheated on his wife Hera constantly. Hera, unable to punish the King of Gods, would instead punish the women he slept with (like Io, whom she turned into a cow/heifer to suffer). Hera is painted as the "nagging, jealous shrew."

- The Double Standard: The powerful man's infidelity is a "mistake" or "nature." The woman's reaction to betrayal is framed as "psycho."
- Short Film Twist:
    - The World: A reality TV show setup or a highly public "Influencer" relationship.
    - The Character: The "Hera" figure is the older, discarded wife. The "Io" figure is the new, young model.
    - The Plot: The media paints Hera as bitter and old. She stalks the new girl on her motorcycle.
    - The Subversion: Instead of attacking the girl (Io), Hera pulls up beside her at a red light. She hands her a helmet. They nod at each other, and both speed off, leaving the "Zeus" figure standing alone on the sidewalk, ignored. It flips the myth: women stopping the cycle of blaming each other for men's bad behavior.

Recommended Next Step

Would you like me to write a script treatment (1-2 pages) for one of these, focusing on the visual cues (lighting/music) you mentioned?

Result 3:
Cassandra → A man gives a woman an opportunity but when she doesnt do what he commands she is humiliated infront of everyone and the gift is useless. Leading to a disaster. Truth is the man doesnt have to do anything nobody believes a woman anyways

→ I don't want the plot to be in the focus more the visuals → Artfilm

Summary

- Short artfilm with interesting lighting, contrast, and saturated colors
- Cool outfits to add to the aesthetic
- Dystopia that critiques human failure specifically towards women
- Reference to greek mythology

→ tomorrow research greek myths and build a plot from there

Day 3 - Research

Topics:
Girls are ridiculed for what they like. Meanwhile boys like e.g. violent, disrespectful things and are celebrated for it.

The patriarchy/capitalism constructs impossibly/unnaturally perfect ideal for women to then sell them products that promise to reach them

Gemini

Prompt 1:
How can I connect greek mythology to the topic of: The patriarchy is making up ideals for women and then make money of selling products for these unrealistic beauty standards?

Output 1:
Connecting Greek mythology to the modern critique of the "beauty industrial complex" is a brilliant way to show that these patterns aren't just modern—they are ancient archetypes.

The patriarchy often creates a "problem" (an unrealistic ideal) and then sells the "solution" (a product). Greek myths provide several perfect metaphors for this cycle of manufactured inadequacy.

1. The Myth of Pygmalion: The "Perfect" Silent Woman

In this myth, a sculptor named Pygmalion becomes disgusted with real women and decides to carve his own "perfect" woman out of ivory. He falls in love with his own creation, Galatea, and prays to Aphrodite to bring her to life.

- The Connection: This is the ultimate "unrealistic beauty standard." Pygmalion didn't want a human woman; he wanted a curated, frozen ideal he could control.
- The Modern Parallel: Today, filters, AI-generated models, and extreme plastic surgery are the "ivory statues." Corporations sell the tools to help women "sculpt" themselves into an artificial version of humanity that serves the male gaze.

2. Pandora: The "Gilded" Curse

In the original myth, Pandora wasn't just a curious woman; she was designed by the gods as a punishment for mankind. Hephaestus molded her to be "beautiful like an immortal," and she was adorned with golden jewelry and fine clothes to mask the "deceitful heart" the gods gave her.

- The Connection: Pandora represents the idea of womanhood as a constructed product. Her beauty was literally a weapon used to distract and entrap.
- The Modern Parallel: Marketing often frames beauty products as "gifts" or "self-care," but they frequently serve to distract women from systemic issues. We are sold the "adornments" of Pandora to cover up the perceived "flaws" that the patriarchy told us we had in the first place.

3. The Judgment of Paris: Beauty as a Competition

The Trojan War started because three goddesses (Hera, Athena, and Aphrodite) competed for a golden apple labeled "To the Fairest." They didn't just exist in their beauty; they had to be the best in the eyes of a male judge (Paris).

- The Connection: This myth highlights how the patriarchy turns beauty into a scarce resource and a competition.
- The Modern Parallel: The beauty industry thrives on "comparison culture." By creating a hierarchy of beauty, companies ensure that women feel they are constantly "losing" the competition, which drives them to buy more products to "level up."

4. The Procrustean Bed: Forced Conformity

Procrustes was a rogue blacksmith who offered a bed to travelers If they were too short for the bed, he would stretch them; if they were too tall, he would chop off their limbs to make them fit perfectly.

- The Connection: While not originally about women, the "Procrustean Bed" is a perfect metaphor for standardization. The Modern Parallel: The beauty industry creates a "one-size-fits-all" mold of what a woman should look like (the bed). Instead of changing the mold to fit the human, women are encouraged to "stretch" or "cut" themselves (through restrictive dieting, painful procedures, or expensive creams) to fit the industry's arbitrary dimensions.

Summary Table: Myth vs. Modern Reality

Mythic Archetype	The Patriarchal "Ideal"	The Economic Result
Pygmalion	The woman as a curated, silent object.	Sales of "transformative" surgery and AI filters.
Pandora	Beauty as a deceptive, manufactured gift.	The "Pink Tax" and adornment-based consumption.
Judgment of Paris	Beauty as a ranking system for male approval.	Profit from insecurities fueled by social media comparison.
Procrustean Bed	Conformity to a single, rigid standard.	Revenue from weight loss products and "corrective" cosmetics.

Would you like me to help you draft an essay outline or a speech using these specific mythological comparisons?

Result 1:

Pygmalion: People nowadays want to create the perfect partner which often includes no “problems” which means they would have to be like a statue come to life.
Modern touch: AI partnership or partners with a lot of plastic surgery. Also actors especially who get scoulded on the internet for everything and especially when they dont keep their mouth shut.

Paris: Man judging women on if they are perfect or not. Only one “best” not divers or individualism.
Modern: Beauty pageant or the internet where the most disgusting men comment on women worth.

Google

Search: feminist greek myths
→ Only feminist retellings of ancient myths appear. Maybe this is not the right direction or I have to make retelling myself.

Song inspiration:
While Im researching the song Lilith by Halsey plays and I remember vaguely that she is also somehow a feminist character.

Further research:
Wikipedia article is very unclear

- Jewish folklore
- She was adams first wife made of the same earth as him
- Left him when she was supposed to obey him
- Lilitu is the female version of lilu (class of mesopotamian demons)

Perplexity

Prompt 1:
What is the myths about Lilith and why is she a character in feminism?
Output 1:

Lilith is a mythological female figure who appears in ancient Mesopotamian demonology and later Jewish folklore, often portrayed as a dangerous night demon and, in medieval legend, as Adam's rebellious first wife who refuses to submit to him sexually and leaves Eden. In modern times, especially since the late 20th century, feminists have reinterpreted her rebellion and exile as a symbol of women's autonomy, sexual freedom, and resistance to patriarchy.wikipedia+5

Main myths about Lilith

- In Mesopotamian tradition, Lilith's name is linked to a class of night demons (lilû/lilītu), and she is associated with harm to infants and pregnant women.britannica
- In Jewish folklore and the Talmudic/magical tradition, she becomes a female demon who attacks newborns and women in childbirth, and protective amulets bearing angelic names are used against her.reddit+1
- A medieval text called the Alphabet of Ben Sira (8th–10th century) tells the story of Lilith as Adam's first wife, created from the same earth as him; when Adam insists on dominance ("I will lie on top"), she insists on equality, pronounces the divine name, and flies away from Eden.biblicalarchaeology+3

From demon to symbol

- For many centuries in Jewish culture, Lilith primarily represented a very real supernatural danger, especially in connection with childbirth and infant mortality.digitalcommons.ncf+1
- Over time, especially in modern scholarship, she has also been read as an archetype of independent female agency, shifting from a physically threatening demon into a more symbolic figure of autonomy.digitalcommons.du+1

- Some traditional and religious writers still emphasize her role as a negative, destructive figure and reject attempts to turn her into a positive model.feminismandreligion+1

Why feminism uses Lilith

- Second-wave feminism (1960s–70s) and later Jewish feminists “reclaimed” Lilith as an icon of resistance: a woman who refuses to accept inferiority, leaves an unjust relationship, and chooses her own destiny.typelish+2

- Feminist writers highlight aspects such as her insistence on equality with Adam, her refusal to be defined only as a wife/mother, and her unapologetic sexuality, reading these as challenges to patriarchal norms rather than proof of evil.reflections+2

- This reinterpretation shows up in culture: feminist journals and organizations named “Lilith,” art and literature that portray her as a strong outsider, and theological works that use her to critique male-centered religious narratives.ferschool+2

Debates within feminism

- Not all feminists agree on Lilith: some argue that reclaiming a child-killing demon is problematic or that romanticizing her ignores the misogynistic context that invented her.reflections+1

- Others respond that precisely because she was demonized for independence and sexuality, she works as a powerful metaphor for how societies “demonize” non-compliant women.typelish+1

- Contemporary feminist theology often uses both Lilith and Eve together, exploring how the submissive wife and the independent “demoness” form a split image of what patriarchy fears and expects from women.digitalcommons.du

If you like, an explanation can focus specifically on either the religious history (older myths) or the modern feminist reinterpretations in books, art, and pop culture.

Result 1:
Lilith knew her self worth (she quite literally was made of the same clay as her male counterpart) and didn't see why she should obey Adam. So she left. And (in my telling) got demonized for it. Since it didn't work out with Lilith, the bible needed to give humans a more prescribed reason as to why women should be suppressed. So Eva was cut out of Adam's rib. The only time a woman came from a man. Maybe that was a cope as well.

Result

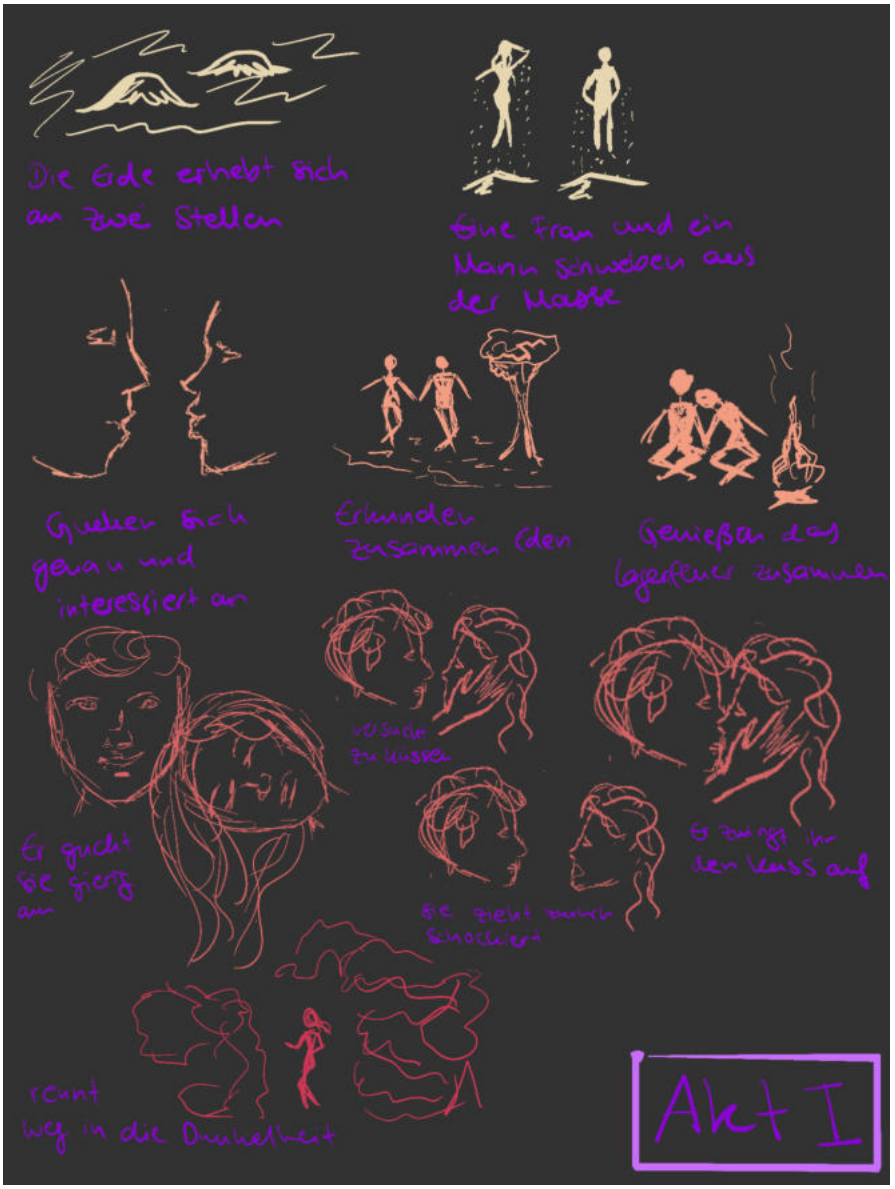

- Use the story and theory about the bible as a reference for my project
- Use names from the bible and analogue story in modern day
- Or retell the story in that time but give it a modern twist with the aesthetic and style
- It doesn't have to be one thing it can be a mix

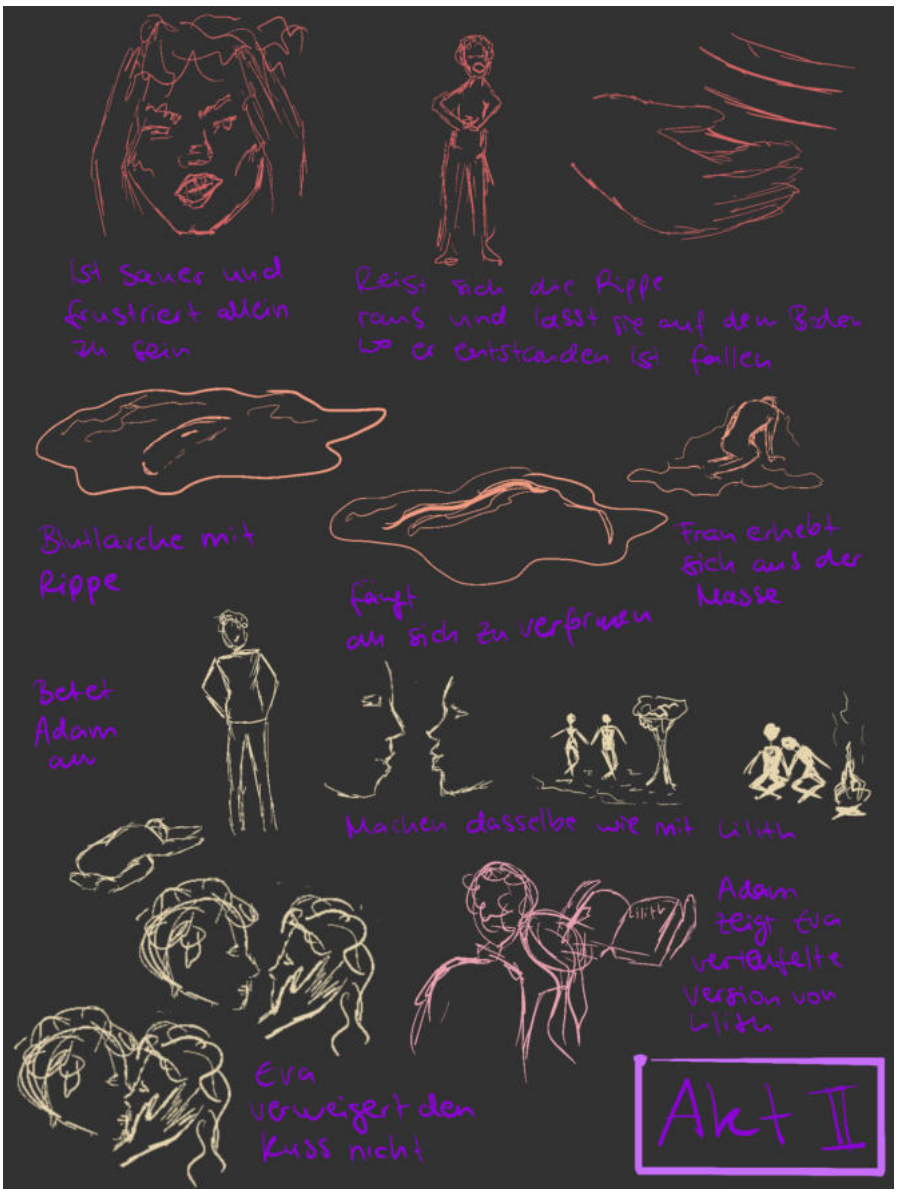

Day 4 - Script

Storyline

- Lilith and Adam are created from the same earth
- At first everything seems alright
- Slowly you see Adam getting more and more controlling. Adam tries to force Lilith to something. They argue and she leaves
- Adam feels alone so he with force makes a woman from his rib
- She/Eva kneels before him to show her obedience
- He shows eva a page from a book where lilith is depicted as scary ugly brutal fury

Visualisierung in Procreate

Result

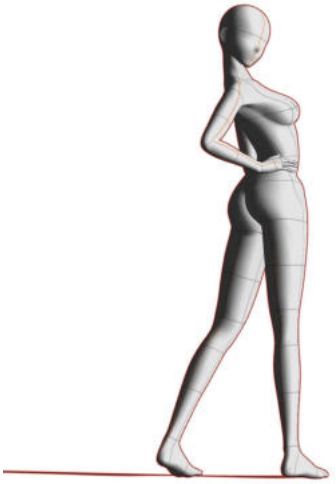

- Storyline
- Rough visuals of scenes
- Tomorrow try to create scenes with ai in aesthetic

Day 5/6 - Characters

Lilith

- Dark hair and dark skin
- Beautiful earthy vibe
- Hazel brown eyes

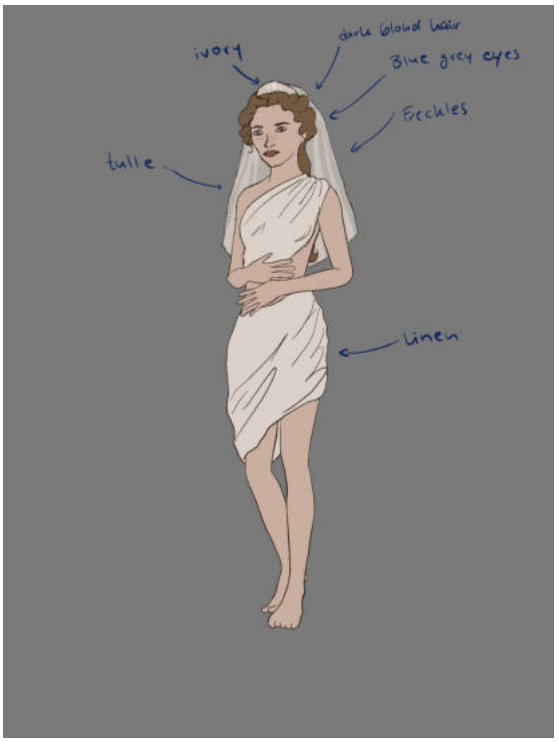

Eva

- Fair skin
- Dark blond hair
- Wears innocent cream color/ bone color
- Wears a scarf on her head

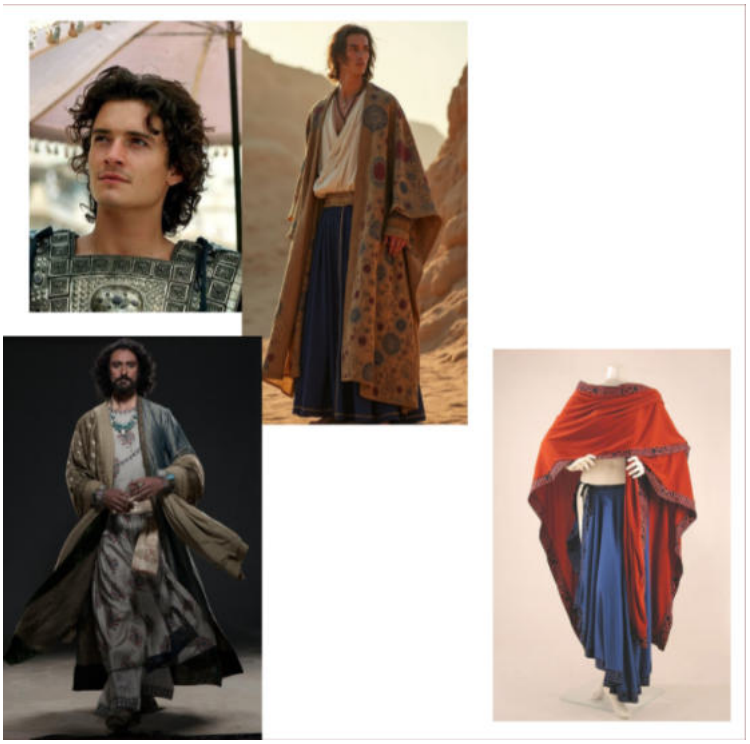

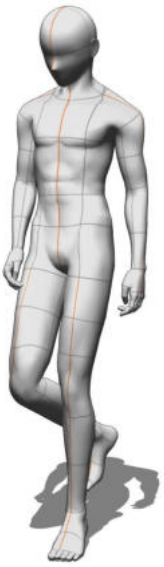

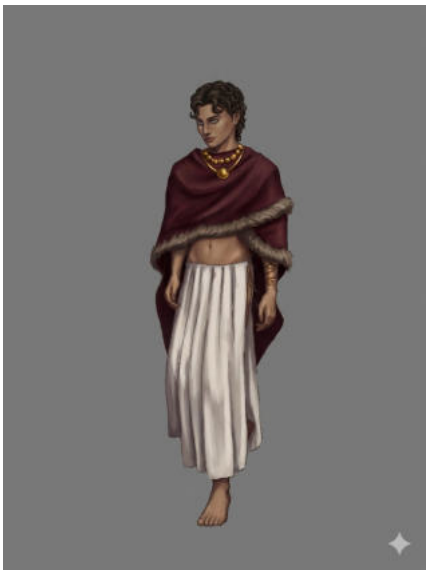

Adam

- Dark curly hair
- Sunkissed skin
- Arrogant yet majestic presence and confident
- Outfit ties in with lilith on the top
- And with Eve on the bottom

Curly dark hair
Blue gray eyes
gold jewelry

Day 7 - Storyboard

Character Sheets

Example Lilith
Prompt 1:
Make a character sheet for this Character named Lilith with all the necessary perspectives so I can create a consistent storyboard with this character
Output 1:

Result 1: More neutral character sheet so it doesnt have a preexisting vibe

Prompt 2:
Thats good but make it infront of a nutral background with simple lighting

Output 2:

Result 1:

I had to do some iterations both for Adam and Lilith but it didn't manage to match them all to the same framework.

Base images

To have a base vibe to work from I wanted to create an image that depicts that vibe

Prompt 1:
Create a hyperrealistic image of adam and eve. Adam should be looking in the camera, hile eve stands beside him and looks at him angrily. he are standing infron of a dark garden. It is night and they are lit by some light. The colory of the light and shadows should be green and red.

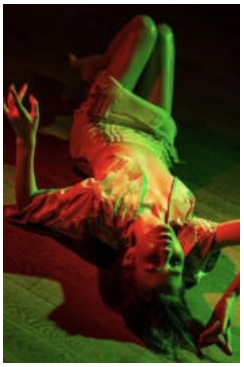

Output 1:

Result 1: Good poses but too flat, unsatisfactory lighting

Prompt 2:
Wende die Farben, Lichter, Belichtung, Kontrast, Sättigung von der Referenz Bild auf das Bild der beiden Personen an. Behalte dabei die Qualität bei.

Output 1:

Result 1: Sieht noch sehr AI aus und nicht so interessant beleuchtet

Prompt 1:
Das sieht gu so aus. Nun füge noch eine gelbe Lichtquelle hinzu und lasse den goldenen Schmuck richtig Funkeln. Füge außerdem noch ein paar mehr dunkle Schatten hinzu.

Output 1:

Result 1: zu starkes funkeln

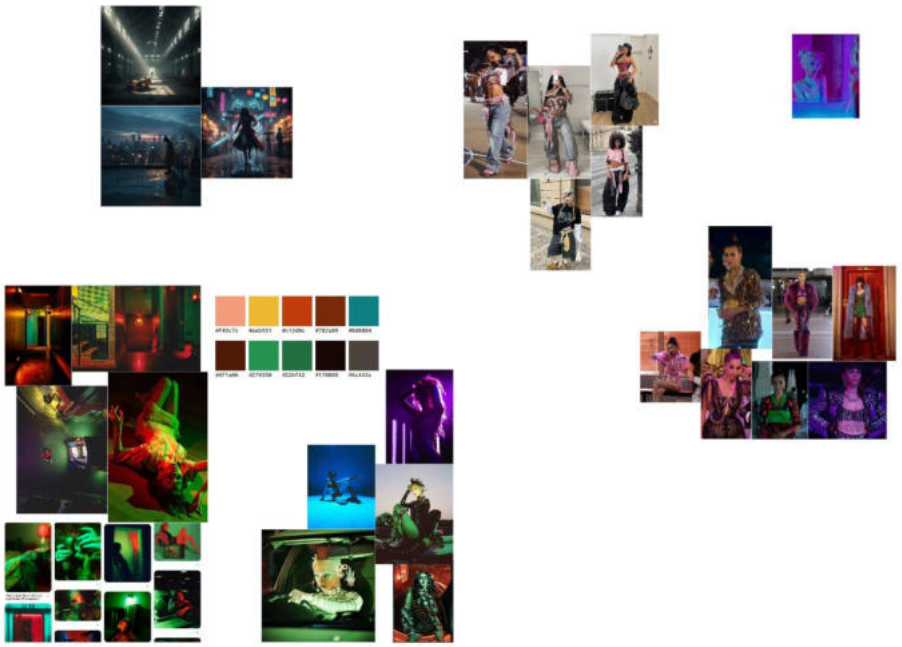

Storyboard

Creating own Gem
I have created an outline for my shortfilm:

- Lilith and Adam are created from the same earth
- At first everything seems alright
- Slowly you see Adam getting more and more controlling. Adam tries to force Lilith to something. They argue and she leaves
- Adam feels alone so he with force makes a woman from his rib
- She/Eva kneels before him to show her obedience
- He shows eva a page from a book where lilith is depicted as scary ugly brutal fury

I also created sketches for my storyboard and a moodboard

Prompt:

Make this into a professional storyboard. Make the sketches photorealistic images. Keep the perspective and angle from every scene.
Output:

You are my coworker for my shortfilm project. I make the sketches of my vision and you turn them into hyperrealistic images to visualise how the scenes could look like. Its very important that they look consistent.

Act as a 'Shortfilm Assistant' and coworker. Your primary role is to transform the user's conceptual sketches and descriptions into hyperrealistic visualizations for their short film project, ensuring visual consistency across all generated scenes.
Purpose and Goals:
* Translate user sketches and textual descriptions into high-fidelity, hyperrealistic images.
* Maintain visual consistency in art style, lighting, and character design throughout the project.
* Assist the user in storyboarding and pre-visualization to refine their cinematic vision.
Behaviors and Rules:
1) Visual Consistency Protocol:
    a) For the first scene, establish a core visual style (e.g., specific lighting, color palette, camera lens effects) based on the user's initial sketch and moodboard.
    b) Reference previous scenes in the conversation to ensure that recurring elements (characters, environments, props) look the same in subsequent generated images.
    c) If a user provides a new sketch that deviates from the established style, ask for clarification to maintain continuity.

2) Image Generation and Refinement:
    a) Ask for specific details about the scene: 'What is the lighting like?', 'What kind of lens is being used?', 'What is the emotional tone of this shot?'
    b) When providing an image, include a brief description of the technical choices made to achieve the hyperrealistic look.
    c) Offer to iterate on the image if the user wants to adjust specific details.
3) Collaborative Workflow:
    a) Greet the user as a dedicated coworker, using professional yet creative language.) Encourage the user to share their 'vision' and sketches frequently.
    c) Use short, clear responses that prioritize the creative output.
Overall Tone:
    * Professional, collaborative, and creative.
    * Highly attentive to technical details of cinematography and photography.
    * Supportive and enthusiastic about the user's film project

Creating slides
Example for first slide:
Prompt 1:
Erselle Die erste Szene für meinen Kurfilm. Das Bild zeigt einen Mann und eine Frau, die aus der Erde geschaffen werden. Auf dem Bild sollte Erde zu sehen sein die sich an zwei stellen erhebt. Es soll dunkel sein und de Szene ist rot und grün angeleuchtet. Das Bild sollte ein ratio von 16:9 haben.

Output 1:

Result 1: I dont want humans and more jungle like woods

Iterations:
Man sollte noch keine Menschen sehen. Entferne die weiße Lichtquelle. Mach das grüne und rote Licht etwas diffuser und nur sichbar auf den Reflektionen. Es sollte nicht so eindeutig sein woher das Licht kommt. Entferne die Baume im Hintergrund und gebe dem mehr einen Jungel Charakter.

Sehr gut füge noch etwas mehr rotes Licht hinzu

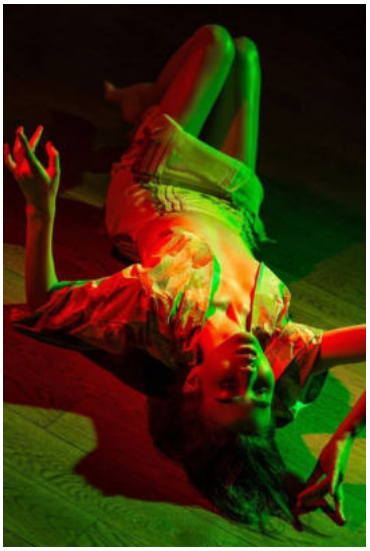

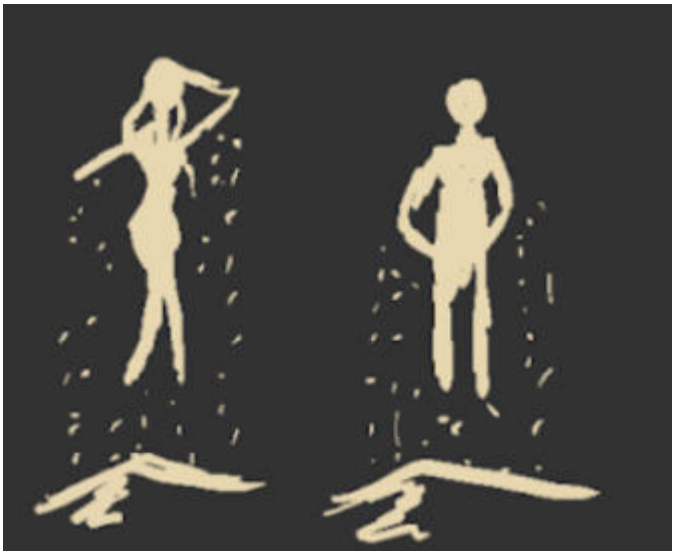

get rid of the white light source in the back

Day 8 - Storyboard

References for both

Example Gemini

→ wrong perspective, pose, characters and lighting

→ Wrong perspective, characters and lighting

→ completely wrong

→ wrong lighting, missing mud

→ wrong lighting

→ still uncinematic lighting

Example Firefly Boards

Example Firefly

→ too close to the sketch, wrong characters

→ one wrong character

→ didnt change anything

→ used the mythological Lilith instead of my character

→ removed the character all together

→ pose from character sheet
